

BIO: SEBASTIAN STEINHAUSER

Sebastian Steinhauser is the CEO and Founder of Parcellly, London's first omnichannel logistics tech start-up converting redundant space in local businesses and private homes into carrier agnostic storage capacity. With an ever-growing nationwide network of more than 2,000 Pick-up-and-Drop-off locations in more than 58 cities across the UK, the multi-award winning, smartphone-based solution puts customers in full control of their parcels by allowing them to choose where and when to collect and return their deliveries.

Parcellly's innovative technology platform resolves industry problems associated with first- and last-mile delivery, whilst driving air quality improvements and reducing white van traffic congestion. Expanding its value proposition over the past years to cater for a wide range of demands within the E-commerce, Retail, Urban logistics and the Corporate space, the company now offers a variety of services including hyper-local Warehousing, Leave-safe, Parcellly Agent, Key-Exchange and Corporate Mailroom management.

Before starting his entrepreneurial career, Sebastian spent 7+ years in London's City with some of Europe's leading financial institutions. Prior to that, Sebastian gained experience in different strategic positions in Germany and France and obtained a triple accreditation in International Management from ESCP Europe.

Spearheading innovation, CSR, sustainability and thought leadership for the delivery logistics industry, Sebastian was voted 'Great British Service Industries Entrepreneur of the Year 2016' and continues to disrupt the current industry status quo.

Sebastian is proud father of a baby daughter. In his limited spare time, he enjoys water and endurance sports (Ironman, marathon, kite surfing, sailing), art, travelling and music.
